Occupational health is an essential but underexplored domain within preventive and social medicine, especially in the context of India's vast and diverse workforce. As the nation advances towards the vision of Viksit Bharat @2047, ensuring the health, safety, and well-being of workers becomes critical. Community Medicine professionals are uniquely positioned to contribute to this agenda by addressing occupational health risks, promoting workplace wellness, and engaging in public health research and policy. However, there remains a gap in awareness and exposure to this field among young doctors. This workshop aims to bridge that gap by sensitizing and orienting postgraduate students and early-career faculty toward the relevance, scope, and career opportunities in occupational health.
